Daily Bulletin

Pledged to neither Side nor Party, But established for the benefit of all.

MONDAY, MARCH 2, 1891.

The Advertiser of this morning indulges in a fine piece of irony under the heading of "A Well-Merited Compliment" to Mr. Jos. O. Carter. It could hardly be drawn from the Advertiser's rather premature attitude toward Her Majesty the Queen, quite lately assumed, that Mr. Jos. O. Carter was her "faithful adviser" who was using his best endeavor to form a Cabinet for her, which would represent the interests of both Queen and people.

There is, however, no doubt that the Advertiser's tardy endorsement of Mr. Carter, as a man who would have received the support of the kingdom at large, is correct, but the public fails to see why Mr. Carter did not receive the endorsement of the Advertiser and its political party before he had ceased to be spoken of as "the coming man."

Is it not rather queer that as soon as Mr. Jos. O. Carter is "out of the fight," as it were, that he should receive this unqualified endorsement from the Advertiser?

It was not so quite lately. Mr. Carter was called to form a Cabinet by His late Majesty Kalakaua, and as soon as it became known the liveliest opposition was raised to him by the leaders of the Reform party, during which the Advertiser kept persistently and ominously silent. The cat had not jumped at that time.

When the leaders of the Reform party openly opposed Mr. Carter's having anything to do with ministerial affairs, it was well known he stood in determined opposition to the bogus commercial treaty with the United States, formulated under the auspices of the Reform party; and that he would remain an unswerving friend to Hawaiian Independence and the native people. Then he was an eminently unfit man for a Cabinet position and was forced to retire because his conscience was not elastic enough to heal the party disaffections existing.

As to the statement that Mr. Carter was called upon to form a Cabinet for Her Majesty the Queen, we cannot quite believe it upon the Advertiser's bare word. The veracity of our morning contemporary has not yet reached that unvarnished plane of integrity which, without proof, is able to transmute assertion into the gold of truth.

There is no doubt, however, after all is said, that Mr. Carter does "possess full public confidence" of both natives and foreigners, but always with the exception of the confidence of the Reform party and the Advertiser. Those who have kept posted on politics for the last year are now casting around to fathom, if possible, this last political move of the Reform party and its organ.

Several committee amendments to the Diplomatic and Consular Appropriation Bill were agreed to in the United States Senate on February 16th. Among them was an amendment for the Hawaiian Cable which passed by a vote of 55 yeas to 27 nays.

The telegrams announce that our

of the strongest arguments to influence Senators in voting for the amendment was a paragraph taken from the committee's report, which appeared while the matter was pending before the Senate. The paragraph in question was written by Lieutenant Clover to show the relationship between the ocean cable and the Nicaragua Canal, and is as follows:

The island of Bermuda occupies in a naval point of view in the Atlantic somewhat the same position that the Sandwich Islands occupy in the Pacific. Within the past month or two a cable has been laid from Halifax to Bermuda by the aid of heavy subsidies from the English Government, and another year will see this line extended to naval strategic points in the West Indies, which will increase English naval power in that section; where naval control means control of either the proposed Nicaragua or Panama canals or the terminus of the great South American Railroad in case of war.

The Committee on Foreign Relations quoted Mr. Blaine as follows: "In the course of events telegraphic communication throughout the Pacific ocean and with the shores of America, Asia and Australia is indispensable and certain to come. A cable joining Hawaii and the American continent, besides being the shortest and least costly link in the general chain, is by far the most important from a political point of view, and I deem it of the highest consequence to the United States that it be promptly constructed by American effort and with the sanction of our Government."

On the 19th of February the matter came up in the House, and, perhaps, owing to the warm fight which had taken place in the Senate between Senators Vest, Cockrell and Call in opposition to the Senate amendment and Senator Edmunds in favor thereof, "The House Committee on Foreign Affairs decided to recommend concurrence in all Senate amendments to the Diplomatic and Consular bill, except the Hawaiian cable project. The House committee has already reported a separate bill for the charter of that company with a Government guarantee, which was prepared with great care and caution, and which is regarded as a more practical proposition than that of the Senate."

It was believed, when the Senate Amendment passed, that the amount of subsidy set at "$250,000 annually and limiting the time to fourteen years," with the total amount of subsidy put at $3,000,000, that no changes would be made in the bill and that President Harrison was sure to sign it, if passed. This belief was strengthened by Senator McPherson moving on February 17th to re-consider "the Hawaiian cable amendment so he might move to reduce the allowance from $250,000 to $150,000." On motion of Senator Edmunds, however, the motion was tabled by a vote of 29 to 25.
